The Richmond authorities are still bent on the question of erasing negroes and setting them free. The Governor of Virginia is in favor of it, and others are against it. Jeff. Davis himself now only objects on the ground of expediency. He does not say it may not be done.

We have thought all the while that this would be the last card they would play. They have shown no scruples about following military necessity.

One of their original proposals a foreign alliance upon condition of abolishing slavery. It would not cost the leaders a moment's thought if it would accomplish the end. They did not care who they had to turn to, so long as they could get their way.

The abolition of slavery in the South is only a delusion. Where there are millions of negroes, and not enough to form an appendix to a community, it matters little to the white man what the status of the negro is; but when there are large numbers, the question becomes one of great difficulty. The negro question cannot be essentially changed. It will remain under some modification as long as the negro remains in company with the white man.

The emancipation of the negro will prove a failure. It will only lead to another system of slavery.

The South can easily agree to emancipation; for it will only make a change in form, not in substance. But it is the form, not the substance, that Europe cares about. Crowded heads are nothing for real liberty. It is not that they desire men to be free, but that they want to be free.

The President has recommended the order of General Dix authorizing troops to pursue any raiders across the Canada line. The general law is against the order of General Dix, but there are exceptional cases. If the necessity is great and overwhelming, the invasion of a friendly territory in pursuit of an enemy is excused. Acting under this necessity is different from giving authority formally, as Gen. Dix did. Each case must stand on its own merits.

The necessity must be made apparent. It is like a case of homicide. It must be in self-defense and necessary. He who does the deed must do it in self-defense.

Great Britain cannot complain, however. She destroyed the steamer Carolina, which was helping the rebels in Canada. The Carolina was taken by the British vessel in American waters—in fact, in an American port. Our Government resented it as an outrage; denied the right of a foreign power to pursue a vessel and capture it within our jurisdiction; but our resentment was expressed in words, while the British Government openly justified the act from first to last. So John Bull could say but little about Dix's order, however. If our act is good, it would not do to extend them to exceptional cases, for a privateer might be destroyed in neutral waters. Brazil might have no right to complain of the late act destroying the Florida, and it is not likely that England would be bound by her own precedents.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial speaks of the aerial form of justice in the person of Judge Chase. Justice is not what Chase's party want. They have more fear from justice than anything else. His form would, indeed, be awful to them, and their justice would be awful to other people. We don't see the use of United States Judges now, when what might be unconstitutional may be made lawful.

The Richmond Examiner has an advertisement of a runaway negro. A correspondent of the New York Tribune writes and the editor prints a whole column to tell the Examiner that the runaway is at Butler's headquarters or thereabouts. The writer indulges in many smart sayings, which it has cost the Tribune more to publish than the American citizen of African descent is worth.

The Governor of Virginia recommends that Virginians who have left the State and gone North should be warned to return home; and if they do not, that all their property be confiscated and their families sent through the lines to the loyal States. So it seems His Excellency claims the power to confiscate all the property of a citizen and banish his family, before he is convicted of any necessity.

OFFICE TRAIL—A train on the Baltimore and Ohio track ran, on Friday night, at the very switch, about two miles from Indianapolis. The engine and all the cars, except the sleeping car, got off the rails, but fortunately the train was stopped before any one was hurt.

A large number of drafted men in Cleared county, Pennsylvania, have returned and appear, and have fled to the mountains and organized themselves into an armed band to resist the officers.

FRONTIER AFFAIR—There was a fatal shooting in Shelbyville, Indiana, on Friday evening last, between Richard M. Thoms and Omar C. Payne, resulting in the instant death of the latter.

A party of Ohio cavalry came near capturing three notorious guerrillas in Bloomfield, Ky., on Friday. The cavalry were just three minutes behind them.

That's What's the Matter.—Dialogue between a Union Soldier and a Refugee from Down South.

BY A GEORGIAN.

Scene: Broadway, Louisville, seated on a curb-stone.

Soldier—I think I saw you down to Rome, Georgia?

Refugee—I was a citizen of Rome when the Federal troops occupied it last May. I think it very probable you saw me there.

Soldier—You lived in a fine good house with a big yard, and a sugar-mill grove in front. Owned that fine mill there, too, I reckon?

Refugee—I was the owner of that kind of property there, but have been compelled to leave it all. The evacuation of Rome by Gen. Sherman made it necessary for me to move farther North.

Soldier—That's what's the matter. But I reckon you see right hard times up here, too, don't you?

Refugee—Yes. I have as yet found no way to make a support for my family, nor do I see any light ahead for me. I am a refugee from home, a homeless wanderer, and I am in need of protection, but not all received employment. I have had to become a beggar.

Soldier—That's what's the matter; eat out and starved out down South, and then when you come up North, where it is said to be a Union man, nobody wants you about them. "Refugees" they call you, and you work if you had a chance.

Refugee—I have discovered that there is a prejudice against refugees, but am satisfied that, if all the circumstances were understood, which have brought me to this, I should be able to find a home, and my deplorable condition would command, if not material aid, at least a share of sympathy and respect. In addition, I am a citizen of the United States, and I am entitled to the same rights as the other citizens of the country.

Soldier—That's what's the matter; eat out and starved out down South, and then when you come up North, where it is said to be a Union man, nobody wants you about them. "Refugees" they call you, and you work if you had a chance.

Refugee—Yes. I have as yet found no way to make a support for my family, nor do I see any light ahead for me. I am a refugee from home, a homeless wanderer, and I am in need of protection, but not all received employment. I have had to become a beggar.
